

Anzea Textiles Introduces Four New Product Lines

This month, Anzea has introduced four new product lines. Two of which are upholstery textiles designed by Mitzi Mills and two are faux leathers.

“Eggs,” a new Anzea textile, has been finished with Crypton2®. This lends incredible durability and stain resistance, as well as being able to be cleaned with bleach. “Pegs” has been finished with Greenshield®, ensuring textile durability and better green practices. In keeping with Anzea’s philosophy, the “Eggs & Pegs” textile introduction has kept in mind color and texture trends as well as overall good design.

Of the faux leathers, Anzea has added another pattern to the “Too Close Too Call” product line. Anzea has also added a product called “Shiny Hide.” As all of the other “Too Close Too Call” designs, “Shiny Hide” has a nylon matrix backing making it puncture resistant, self-healing, and it comes with an ink removing cleaning agent. Just as the name implies, there is a luxurious shine on this product, blurring the lines between leather and faux leather even further.

Anzea’s other beautiful faux leather introduction is “Highland.” The “Highland” line is evidence that there is an increasing demand for polyurethanes and polyvinyl to look and feel like something that they are not. Highland has a wonderful hand, feeling and looking like woven linen. The colorways have stayed neutral and earthy in keeping with the naturalness of this faux leather.
